Food Bank of Central & Eastern North Carolina Announces 2010 Summer Food Service Sites

One more way organization makes sure children are fed during the summer

GREENVILLE, NC - In 2008, the Food Bank of Central & Eastern North Carolina held the first Kids Summer Stock events around its service area to bring awareness to and collect food and funds for children who do not have access to school meals during the summer. The organization lead the awareness effort and also began planning for its own sponsorship opportunities of summer food programs as another way to feed the growing need among children at risk of hunger. In 2009, the organization sponsored 14 Summer Food Service Sites. As a result of the growing need for more programs, the Food Bank will sponsor 30 sites during summer 2010 located throughout their service area and anticipates serving more than 109,000 meals to children at locations throughout its 34 counties. Today, the Food Bank of Central & Eastern North Carolina announces the 2010 sites that are still open to receive participants in their Greenville Branch service area.

The Summer Food Service Program (SFSP) is a federal child nutrition program that provides up to two meals a day to children age 18 and under during the summer (or when schools are on extended breaks of 15 days or more). Unfortunately, when school is out, millions of low-income children lose access to the school breakfasts, lunches and after-school snacks they receive during the regular school year. SFSP is designed to take the place of school meals, when school is out.

Last summer, the Food Bank served 19,013 meals to children participating in the SFSP in Halifax, Franklin, Wake, Nash, Chatham, Granville, Warren and Vance counties. The Food Bank took the responsibility of completing all paperwork, freeing the agencies to concentrate on the main goal – feeding children. This year the organization has doubled the number of sponsored programs.
